CORNELL'S COLORED DEMOSTHENES.

Orator Cook Was Chosen Unanimously and Solely on His Merits,

SPECIAL TO THE WORLD. ITHACA, N. Y., Oct. 23, .- That no distinction is made at Cornell University on account of race or color was shown yesterday by the elec-tion of Charles C. Cook (colored) to the office of prize orator of the senior class, as briefly anmounced in this morning's WORLD. While the other offices were eagerly sought by numerous other offices were eagerly sought by numerous candidates and deep political schemes were resorted to, Mr. Cook had no opposition and was elected by 187 votes.

Cook comes from Washington and is nineteen rears old, being one of the youngest men in the class. His father is a retired speculator of considerable wealth. The young orator is of medium height and weight, handsome features, pearly a mulatto in complexion and wears a light mustache. In his underclassman years he took an active part in cane rushes and pulled on the Sophomore thre-of-war. In scholar-hip he ranked high on entering the university and since that time he has been considered one of the brightest members of the class. During the past two years he has been paying special attention to philosophy and expects to teach that subject after graduation. Cook greases elegantly and mingles little in society. His acquaintance among the fair sex is confined to his cousin, Miss Datcher, who is also a senior. By the students Cook has always been treated as an equal.

At the Senior banquet Cook will be the lead-the students Cook has away best the sequal.

At the Senior banquet Cook will be the leading figure, and his witticisms will be expended in distributing the class prizes. He has taken special lessons in elecution and is considered a good orator. His election was purely on ment, with no attention paid to either his color or wealth. In the Senior class ten nationalities are represented, and in making up the committees all will be recognized.

The Voyage of Fred Douglass, ISPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE WORLD. I PORT AU PRINCE, Hayti, Oct. 8.—The Kearsarge has safely carried Minister Frederick Doughas hither. As he stood on her deck just a week ago in New York Harbor, acknowledgens the salute tendered jum, handkerchiefs in every direction futtering an adieu and hearty god-speeds a wetting him from vesses, and docks, who could realize that just fifty-one years ago he was on the docks of New York a runaway slave, looking among the cotton bales for a bed for the night? He remembered it that morning, if no one else did. Capt. Whiting could not possibly de more than he has done for the comfort of the whole party, and the same may be said of every officer aboard, while sailors and marines contributed their share to the pleasure of the guests in every way they could. [SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE WORLD.]

An Incorrigible Young Burglar. "Good gracious!" said Judge Martine in amaze-ment, "is it possible this child has committed three burglaries!" "That's his record," said Agent Stocking, and he went on to relate how Charles Peterson, a nine-year-cid boy, who lived at No. 49 Thomas street, had, as told in THE WORLD some weeks ago, with larger boys, proved himself an incorrirable burylar, having robbed a fur store on Hudeon street, playing the part of Oliver Twist. Judge Martine committed the boy to the Juvenile Asylum.

Passengers on the "L" Get Out and Walk broke down at One Hundred and Fourth street about O'cieck last night, blocking the up track for nearly an hour. All the up trains in the mean time were stopped by block and stretched from One Hundred and Fourth street to Eighty-first street before the blockade was finally broken. Many of the passengers became impatient at the long delay and made their way by the footpath along the track to the nearest station.
